"DOWN ON THE MISSISSIPPI FLOATING."

Greeting.

BOARD OF EDITORS "OLE MISS."

To the "University Greys," who, under the leadership of that gallant

Student=Soldier,

William Benjamin Lowry,

resigned their college labors to battle for the cause of their fathers,

this volume is affectionately dedicated.

Raison d' Être.

IN this book, gentle reader, the Board of Editors present to you Volume I of the "Ole Miss" of the University of Mississippi.

Realizing that apologies, however well founded, avail nothing, we submit to you this product of our labor fully conscious of its many defects, and trust that in your criticism you will bear in mind the fact that "Ole Miss" is yet only a debutante.

If the present volume contains only a bundle of mistakes—the result of labor misapplied, still its mission will not be entirely fruitless; it will be of service to future Editorial Boards by indicating, in a measure, what should be avoided in succeeding volumes.

It has been our purpose to present life at the University in its various phases, to give the stranger to our institution some idea of our daily life, to keep the alumnus in touch with his Alma Mater, and lastly to give the student a partial diary of his life at the University during the present session. If we have succeeded in this then "Ole Miss" has accomplished its purpose.

THE EDITORS.

History of Hermaean Society.

MOTTO-Amicitia Sempiterna Conjuncti.

Hermes, the Grecian God of Eloquence.

©ERMÆAN LITERARY SOCIETY was organized early in the session of 1848 and '49, the first session of the University. From the only records now extant we learn that another society was founded the same year. This was called the Phi Beta Kappa. But in the spring of '49 Phi Beta Kappa became the Phi Sigma, Thus Hermæan antedates its rival of today. It was customary in those days for the members of the faculty to be honorary members of one of the societies. These members assisted in furnishing the society rooms-the two front rooms, second and third floors, of the Lyceum-and frequently attended the regular meetings, which were held on Friday evenings, and took part in the discussions. Each society had a long roll of honorary members, comprising the most prominent men in this as well as the neighboring states. Libraries were begun by subscription. Ribbon rosettes and gold badges were worn by the members. The rivalry between Hermæan and Phi Sigma grew to be very intense; in fact, so intense that a joint committee was appointed to draw up esolutions of reconciliation. Upon the society floor these resolutions were subjects of much dispute and debate. They were accepted by piecemeal. Matters moved on in this way until Mississippi seceded and the great war drew near. The University Grays were organized, the societies voted appropriations, the University suspended and the brave boys went from the classic halls to the battlefield. There was no rivalry now, for every heart and hope was for defense and Southland. Four years of war passed and then all was over. Very few indeed of the "old guard" returned to the University at its opening in the autumn of 1865. Hermæan was immediately reorganized. It could not die. Since then, barring a brief period, its career has been one of continued usefulness. The star of a never dying hope has led it onward and upward. Many of the most distinguished men of Mississippi and her sister Southern states have burned sweet incense upon the Hermean altar. They are found at the bar, on the rostrum, in the pulpit and in the legislative halls of the States and the Nation.

A few years ago the Board of Trustees made a requirement that each student enrolled in the University should be assigned to one of the societies. This plan proved a failure from its beginning. The members who were earnest and faithful, who desired to do good work, were silenced by a careless and unruly majority. Through the efforts and influence of Hermæan this requirement was subsequently repealed. A new Constitution was drafted and adopted. This new regime has been entirely satisfactory and the work done eminently successful. The election to membership is wholly by secret ballot. The membership for the present session is 50.

Hermæan offers four gold medals as prizes. Two are offered to the Freshman for excellence in declamation, one to the Junior for excellence in oratory, and one to the Senior for excellence in debate. The Anniversary is the 22d of February—the anniversary of the birth of Washington. No Anniversarian is selected now, but the day is celebrated as Junior Day. The Hermæan Juniors contest on this occasion for the Junior Medal. The exercises of the University are suspended.

The meetings of Hermæan are held in its Hall in the Chapel building on Saturday morning of each week. It is secret except to the faculty. The Hall is neatly and comfortably furnished. The floor is carpeted, seated with chairs, and the walls, handsomely papered in the Society colors, are hung with paintings and portraits. The President's stand is decorated with the mystic symbols known to the loyal member, and the silken banner bears the lyre of the Grecian god. In its finances the society is on a business basis. All fines and dues are collected. Tardiness or delay is not tolerated. Such brings expulsion, and expulsion brings disgrace.

Hermæan is progressive. It is a democratic body governed by parliamentary rules. Its aim is to prepare men for the higher walks of life—for good and honest and outspoken citizenship; to cultivate a love for literature; to bring forth and develop the latent powers of oratory; to make strong, concise and logical in argument; and to create and make lasting the ties of college friendship. It has a well deserved reputation for the best of order and the best of work. A Hermæan public occasion is never a failure. A large audience greets its every appearance and never goes away disappointed. Its diploma, presented to its graduating members, is highly prized. It is a badge of the highest honor. To be a Hermæan means more than you can understand—more than I can tell you. There is no sweeter music than that of the Hermæan lyre.

Senior Class History.

T WAS a sad day for me when the duty of writing a history of the Class of 1897 was laid upon me. Must I relate all their many and great deeds in the small compass of one page? Day and night this problem weighed upon my mind. I was unable to think of anything else. I consulted the wisest men of the age and they, after much deliberation, told me that it was impossible to write the history of so remarkable a class on one page; that a book would hardly suffice.

I then classified their deeds, but found not space to write down even the names of the classes. I then cast aside all but their great deeds—deeds which, if recorded upon the pages of the world's history, would not be dimmed by the luster of the noblest deeds of the noblest men of the world. To my dismay, I found that I had not space to write them down. That night I slept not. Despair filled my soul, as I saw more clearly each moment that the problem was insolvable. It seemed strange to me that a class so extraordinary should not be allowed a thousand pages. Oh! how I wished that the class had been more ordinary!

When I found that I could not relate their mighty deeds, that I should not have an opportunity to describe in poetical language their glorious progress onward and upward toward Fame's loftiest summit, I determined to give in a few words the secret of their success and say nothing more: they were filled with that energy and enthusiasm which led them to undertake the most difficult tasks, and they had perfect confidence in their ability to accomplish whatever they undertook.

Junior Class History.

HE humble historian of the class deeds now takes up his pen to find that he needs much time and more space fully to relate the wonderful accomplishments of the class of '98. So perforce and by request he has finally decided (rather than by our haughty rivals be derided), to indicate a few lines in which we excel even the accomplished clubmen of "Henri de Fontinelle."

When last year as Sophomores we first organized, forthwith the enthusiasm manifested surprised our rivals to such a wonderful extent that the "co-eds" in pity gave them kind consent to prevent by encouragement any depression that would naturally result from the defeats of the session. But notwithstanding opposition we took the lead and won the admiration, by word and by deed, of faculty and students—whether rival or not—and at commencement we found that we verily had got-what is for them an extremely hard lot—the fuel intended to boil '99's pot. At the opening of this session, when first we met, there was manifested enthusiasm that evidently let the student body know that we had come to try by all means to leave nothing undone that might in the future perchance accrue to the interests of the class and secure its due. And then considering that as Juniors we were classed, we also decided that we had passed from the ways of him who, as a rule, is aptly characterized by the term "wise fool." But to tell you of all that as Juniors we've done is a Herculean task that could hardly be begun; consequently, I have decided only to mention a few points and circumstances to which attention should be called, and which go to demonstrate why the girls think so much of the class of '98. In foot ball, in base ball, in athletics as a whole we lead from the first to the last of our roll, and my classmen will chastise me for not saying enough when I say that we are characterized by the term, "hot stuff." A mighty contest in foot ball we had not long ago with our rivals, the Sophs., and we beat them so that they all lined up in battle array, each one as if prepared for a general fray. But a remark from a bystander was sufficient to recall what has ever been clearly manifest to us all. "They have decided," says he, "that all their force lies in successfully inventing what they term 'guy's'". And immediately as if in confirmation of this, they started on a yell with Ris! Ris! Perhaps this is sufficient to indicate the source of all that is properly termed Sophomore force. And now, dear reader, please do not surmise that we are trying in any way to disguise the fact that we have ever been classed as Sophomores, from which we have only just passed. But I wish forcibly to convey this impression that to every rule there is a slight digression, and we Juniors deny that we ever were so green as to convey the idea that we were Sophomorally mean. But I had better mention just for mere rhyme a feat that's recited by the class of '99. A challenge we received to play base ball—amid shouts from the Sophs. that we knew nothing at all of the courage and valor that would be required to win any honor to which they aspired. And to allow them an opportunity to verify their statements and fully to satisfy their anxiety, we decided to have our fun, for what a pleasure to see a Sophomore run! Well, I believe there was a small contest that satisfied the Sophs. as to who are "the best" in base ball; but I shall try to be your friend by bringing such an insignificant affair to an end. Now I don't wish to criticise the Seniors spitefully, but they expect more praise than they're entitled to rightfully. They all consider themselves a crowd of Solons, but the Freshmen consider them more as "old ones," for they mope around and walk as if tired and think themselves always honored and admired, while the truth is, their energy is not sufficiently intense to insure their getting over a common sized fence. They always wait for the Juniors to take the lead and expect their advice according as there is need; but when towards the problems of the world they turn their face we trust that they'll start with a more energetic pace. 'Twould be in order to view the Freshmen next, a criticism of whom would afford a nice text; but I think of the trials and troubles, and ups and downs before they can put on the caps and gowns, and am convinced that 'twould be a mark of insanity thus mercilessly to impose on helpless humanity.

Now a very few remarks by way of conclusion, I say that it certainly can be no delusion that the '98 class is entitled by right to be designated and honored ever as the "elite;" and if any criticism has been too severe, please do not think that we are usually austere, but just mend your ways and give great weight to the advice offered you by the class of '98.

history of the Class of '99.

Freshmen when on the fifteenth of September, eighteen hundred and ninety five, we marched into the Chapel of the University of Mississippi for the first time. We looked with a kind of awe upon the stately Profs. seated upon the rostrum clothed in all the dignity our imagination had pictured. But soon association proved that they were the best friends we had, that their dignity was not half so grave and imposing as we had supposed.

Time rolled on, the first mile post is past, we now number seventy-five; we bear the long coveted name of Soph. never to be called Prep. again. We look back and remember how it rankled in our hearts to hear some proud Sophomore say, "It is only a 'Prrrep.'" The class of ninety-nine has every reason to be proud of herself. She has already carried off many honors, some of her members making among the best marks in Mathematics in the history of our University, notwithstanding this is their pet aversion, and the flash of the eyes of their smallest Prof. makes them tremble with fear. In History, too, they gladden the heart of the youngest "fellow" as they detail with due precision "characteristics, tendencies, effects on civilization, and attendant circumstances." When the base ball season came around, the ever glorious Sophs, showed "who played ball." From the beginning the Class of ninety-nine has been the champion of the diamond. Ever ready to meet any team, and never has the black and gold been trailed in the dust. Then, too, our boys may be commended for their chivalry towards the fair sex. Ever will the Co-eds have tender memories of the many attentions shown them by the Sophs. Next year they will be Juniors and they hope that even when they attain to that high degree they will still have that respect for themselves and courtesy for others that has won for them the regard of all. And the best of wishes will attend them through the years to seniority, when they shall stand and hear the welcome plaudit, "Receive thy 'dip,' depart from us, henceforth we will hear from you with loving pride."

Hail to the Soph, who in triumph advances!

May victory follow the black and the gold—
The Freshmen and Juniors and e'en the grave Seniors.

The Ninety-nine class in high honor all hold. The flash of their colors is seen on the Campus.

Wherever there's prize or reward to be won They'll go on to glory—they'll never be vanquished.

The 'Varsity always will joy in each son, The honors are many that fall to her children,

In Congress and Senate in glory they shine.

Let her fear not the future her record unsullied,

Is safe in the hands of eighteen ninety-nine.
Then hail to them! Crown them! They'll always deserve it.

Long wave o'er the hill-tops the black and the gold!

All honor to Ninety-nine, wisdom and power

Be ever their guerdon to win and to hold!

history of the Class of 1900.

HEN the three-fourths of a hundred Freshmen who compose the class of 1900, began the making of this history the 12th of September, 1896, it was not supposed that the world would contemplate their chroniclings in open-mouthed astonishment. We do not, as a whole, claim to have accomplished much that other classes of like capacity could not have accomplished. We have plodded our way along the path of advancement with but few occurrences worthy of special note or of material interest to others. There are among our number numerous ones who may eventually climb to a higher round on the ladder of fame than is reached by the majority of mortals—let us hope that they will.

We have signally failed in one thing only that now comes home to the historian: the making of history. To attempt an explanation of this deplorable failure is not one of the chronicler's duties, and yet we would fain make excuses.

The class of 1900 has truly been gathered from far and from near. It almost seems that excursions have been made into "the highways and hedges" to bring together so many types of character, and yet, when an attempt is made to single out characteristics—distinguishing characteristics—ye historian stops appalled, and sees nothing resulting from her best efforts.

We began our year's work as strong, morally, mentally and physically, as any class anywhere. We have won distinction in athletics, in oratory, in scholarship, in all things for which we have contested—when no stronger contestants have opposed us; but alas! we have made no history.

It is indeed fortunate that our "class life" has just begun, and that we are now placed in a position where we can profit by the experiences of the past year's inaction and begin in '97 to do those things which we have not done in '96.

Nothing was farther from our intentions in the beginning of the scholastic year, than to so act as to make a disappointment to our friends necessary when the Annual's chapter on Freshman history was read. We have, however, the consolation of knowing, or rather of believing, that not much is expected of the average Freshman by his wiser(?) and more advanced Sophomore, Junior and Senior friends. Now, had we been Sophomores, our acquired wisdom would have, beyond doubt, so directed our movements as to have forced us to do great deeds and nobly meet all conditions by which we might have been confronted.

On the whole, it is doubtless best that we, as a class, have not attempted to force our way into the territory of our contending friends. None can doubt as to what the result would have been when our lances crossed.

Our historical era is now about to dawn, and woe betide him who opposes us in our onward march.

We have equipped ourselves with impenetrable armor and are now waiting for the fray, feeling fully competent to meet and vanquish any opposing force. There is, of course, a reason for the security of our present position; it is found in our class organization. With P. E. Sloane, President; H. R. Shands, Vice-President, and M. B. Leavell, Secretary, we can confidently take the field, and promise great things for '97.

MOTTO-Festina Lente.
YELL-It requires too much effort to yell.

URING the past session, this Club has done immeasurable good toward the advancement of the now popular science, "Bumology."

In spite of the labor involved, the members of this organization have carried the banner of rest to the summit of the mountain of leisure (W. J. B.) They have made of loafing a science and an art.

To better explain the purpose of this ancient and honorable order, we quote from Article 14 of the Constitution: "Any member of this organization who does not loaf at least four hours per day shall be publicly expelled." We add, parenthetically, that there have been no excommunications for a violation of this requirement.

The foundation of this Club antedates the Flood. Not once since its inception has interest in the furtherance of its objects flagged. Did we care to increase the membership, we could easily proselyte thousands. As it is, the membership is limited to four. It is at once the "Academy" of the University organizations.

As an earnest of their fraternal solicitations, the following masterpieces (now in press) have been dedicated to the Club by their respective authors:

"Oratory Made Easy"—W. JENNINGS BRYAN.

"Bumming as a Fine Art," (Edition de Luxe)—JACOB COXEY.

"Compatibility of Presidential Labors and Duck-Hunting"—BRO. GROVER.

YELL-Hear us yell! Aren't we swell! Henri De Fontenelle!

HIS DRAMATIC CLUB was organized at the University of Mississippi in 1895. It is the most exclusive and the most sought-for organization in College. Since its foundation it has made rapid progress, and is a source of great pleasure and instruction both to the Faculty and entire student-body.

The Stag Club.

HE STAG CLUB was founded at the University of Mississippi in eighteen hundred and ninety-five.

Its membership is restricted to the Law Department, and is composed of fraternity men entirely, active membership being limited to seven.

The object of the Stag Club is to promote a stronger feeling of friendship and brotherly love between members of the Law Department, and to raise them to a higher plane of social enjoyment and pleasure and let it be known that the Epicurean tastes of its members are not forgotten.

While some of the rights of the Club are secret and closed to the world, it is generally open in its proceedings in order that those men who are not so fortunate as to gain membership may see and be wise (?).

The annual banquet given by this organization is one of the principal events of the year, being literally "a feast for the gods," and many a distinguished man graces the occasion and bows his head in homage to our venerable stag.

Stag Club Song.

Pass round the bowl, Let mirth and joy and jollity reign in every heart; Let soul meet soul, And the precious glow of friendship from us ne'er depart. Quaff brimming glasses, And in each thrilling purple draught we drink. And as each moment passes, Let love and sympathy our hearts the closer link.

Cast care to the winds.

Nor let the thoughts of future ills intrude
To dull our minds,
Nor evils past, our present joys preclude,

Freshman Latin.

This Latin is the hardest thing!
I'm worried anyway;
Thinking 'bout that foot ball game
The boys are goin' to play,
So I'll jus' let this Latin go,
I'm all upset to-night,
An' everything
Jus' seems to sing
In murmurs soft an' light;
"Cicero! Cicero!"

It's only a shiver,
That's sure to deliver,
A blush of half-hidden shame;
It's only revealing
A wonderful feeling.
Which nothing can ever proclaim.

An' then those murmurs make it worse!
Their echoes reach my soul!
But thinking still: "Those other boys
'll never find the goal!"
So l'll jus' let this Latin go,
An' go to sleep 'til day,
But 'cross the hills,
The whippowills
Jus' hollow back an' say:
"Cicero! Cicero!"

A "Bust."

An innocent spoiler,
Embarrassing foiler,
Of days of labor and pains;
Serves only to tighten,
And never to lighten,
The great University chains.

Oh, if our boys should meet defeat,
An' come back full o' woe;
They couldn't sing a sadder song
To me, than 'Cicero.''
An' if 1 let this Latin go,
Though right here 1 should die,
The chiding win'
Would then begin
To sing an' moan an' sigh:
"Cicero! Cicero!"

It's only a fearing,
That makes more endearing.
The chiming chapel-bell's call;
An unlucky season
For losing one's reason,
Just simply a "bust,"—that's all!

H Song of a Prep.

AIR-"THE SPANISH CAVALIER."

One bright summer day there came, so they say,
A lad to the University, dear,
From a Mississippi village not so very far away,
Whose name I dare not mention to thee, dear.
He entered as a Prep, but he found out, alas,
That a Prep is a persecuted thing, dear!
For whenever he would pass, the whole Senior Class
Would yell most provokingly and say, dear,

CHORUS—"Say, Preppy, say, why don't you go away?
Pray, do you know what you're about, dear?
Did you bring your dolls and your 'ittle riding horse?
And, say, does your mother know you're out, dear?"

This darling little Prep had a quick, elastic step,
And a cunning head of yellow curly hair, dear.
And being very pretty, he established quite a "rep,"
He could distance any other fellow there, dear.
Examinations came, and Preppy "bluffed the game,"
And made his preparations for to try, dear,
But it must be confessed, his attempt was rather lame,
He was haunted by that same old Senior cry, dear,

CHORUS—"Say, Preppy, say, why don't you go away?
Pray, do you know what you're about, dear?
Did you bring your dolls and your 'ittle riding horse?
And, say, does your mother know you're out, dear?

He had the gall and cheek to go and try his Greek, But when the list of questions he saw, dear, His face was quite unique, as he said subdued and meek, "I have surely bit off more than I can chaw, dear." He went out of the room, and he gave the door a slam, And called his Professor a pet name, dear. He had tried hard to "cram" for the "intermed" exam., But he didn't make the "rise" all the same, dear.

So, bye, Preppy, bye! don't you cry!
Go back to your 'ittle nursery, dear,
And when you get older, in the sweet bye and bye.
Come back to the University, dear.

Familiar Recipes.

how to make a Patriot.

Take an ordinary citizen, out of a job, with his eye on the post-office: heat with a quart of bad whiskey, then stir with a few remarks touching on the superiority of the American eagle over all birds of the air and beasts of the field. Stuff with a few choice epithets, such as "Anarchist," "Repudiationist," and other pithy representations of inward vacancy. Let cool over night in the "cooler," and next day add "ten days."

how to Make a Family Fuss.

Take a husband, wife, baby, nurse and cook. Mix all up in apartments at the top of a down town flat; let the wife season with vinegar, the husband with complaints and the cook with burnt waffles; let the whole boil until the next floor gives notice, and then bring to a stew by the wife going home to her mamma. Serve with a writ of ejectment.

× ×

- "Prize fights are brutal, degrading."
- "How much did you lose?"
- "I hear that the students of Millsaps College have organized themselves into a Legislature."
- "What do they want to make fools out of themselves for?"

Proverbs.

Whatever else may come, the "inevitable" must come.

He who expects to rate high in the Chancellor's opinion must not expectorate on the floor—try the wall.

My son, if turkey stealers entice thee, consent thou not, for their feet run to evil and make haste to shed turkey blood.

Do others or they'll do you.

The maiden wise in heart shall be called prudent and the sweetness of her lips increaseth kisses.

The prudent "Vipers" foresee the "Jay" and hide themselves; but the careless pass on and are punished.

Love not sleep lest it keepeth ye from Chapel and causeth ye to get demerits.

The prayer of the liverymen availeth much: for the rain descendeth and the boys are hacked.

Ye who would receive justice, be careful how ye treat the "Prof's."

Be not like the man who speaketh in the graveyard; for he is heard but misunderstood.

When the moon shineth from a clear sky, the faster the girl, the slower the gait.

When thou sitteth to eat at a boarding house table, consider well what is before thee.

Blessed is he who laugheth at the "Prof's." jokes, for he shall surely make the rises.

oor Peter.

Do not criticize my meter. Faulty rhyme, or twisted words; Simply listen to my story Of a prince among the birds.

Of a barnyard's dire disaster,
Of a loved one's broken heart.
Where the "Grabber," "Watcher,"
"Runner,"
And the "Agent" played a part.

Once there lived a gentle lady In a cottage small but neat, 'Neath the shade of forest treasures But a trifle near the street.

With the love of all about her. She loved one above the rest. This was Peter, ever faithful, Handsome Peter, she loved best.

Happy monarch was this Peter, Petted. fondled, loved by all. But too proud and too conceited; And 'twas this that caused his fall.

Light with thoughts of peerless beauty And with love for vain display In the eyes of strangers passing, In the front yard, day by day. He would strut and gobble proudly While his plumage mirror bright Broke into a thousand beauties, Countless rays of solar light.

To our lady, boarders hastened. With keen appetites all whet Thinking they should live on turkey, But my tale is not told yet.

Day by day this lady fooled them,
Till her promise came with grit,
"On the morrow we shall eat him,"
But the echo answered "nit."

Whence that echo? Oh! she knew not, Cheers and shouting reigned inside — But the "Watcher" on the pavement Moved along with hasty stride.

That same night convened a council, To the chief's room came his men, Heads but four, yet inward cravings Were enough for fully ten.

From this room with quiet exit Glided shadows, four in all; Calhoun was to raise her pennant, All opposed must bow or fall.

O'er the snow they swiftly bounded But so trained and skilled were they That with swiftness there was silence As the band swept on its way.

Hist! They've reached their destination 'Tis the house of Peter the proud, And with deftness they shall have him Ere the moon escapes the cloud.

Though the door is locked securely, Planks are taken from the side; Quick as thought the work is finished And the workers scatter wide.

Through the darkness sped the "runner."
Through the oaks upon the hill
Till at length his limbs grew weary,
And his comrades found him still.

"Up and On," the chief commanded, "Why delay our mission so;"
But the runner fell exhausted
Fell he prone upon the snow.

"Ah! I have it." cried the "Watcher"
Ever quick, and kind at heart,
"Peter is by far the larger,
Let me take the 'Runner' part."

Then away all dashed together
To headquarters sped they on
To the chief's room where, disbanding,
Peter rested till the dawn.

On the morrow there is waiting "'Pestelate,' 'Chauntecleer?' Can you tell me of Poor Peter. How did Peter disappear?"

Though the fowls gave back no answer. Yet the foot-prints tell the tale. And the mistress and the boarders. Sad at heart their loss bewail. Soup instead that day was served them.
But our doubts were to a man
That the lady e'er suspected
Peter's death was near at hand.

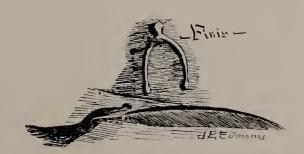

"Come, my fellows, all is ready, Hither guests the board is spread, Gather round our weighty table Let the inner man be fed."

They are "Grabber," "Watcher," "Runner," And the "Agent." who this night With their friends they trust and honor Now are serving Peter right.

"Let us feast on this occasion Let us give our spirits rein. May no cloud our pleasure shadow Nor our full 'hearts' give us pain."

Who is speaking, whence such laughter? Why this feast in Calhoun Hall? Can you tell me who the guests are. And the meaning of it all?

Thus my story finds its ending. But the moral you must heed. Pride and love of admiration An inevitable fall precede.

my Co-ed.

There is a smile—the brightest smile—
It puts to shame the rose!
The evening breeze
It's beauty sees,
And it just sighs, and blows.

There are two eyes—most sparkling eyes—
So tender and so true
That nature vies
With summer skies.
To imitate their hue.

There is a voice—the sweetest voice—Like music from on high!
It's tender note
Just seems to float.
With sunbeams to the sky.

There is a girl—the dearest girl—
Oh was there ever shed
A drop of dew
On lily's hue
So fair as my Co-ed?

"Then what shall we say of co-education?"

Я Mishap.

The Freshy sought to mount his steed And ride with lordly air, A lowly "jack" his charger was— They formed a handsome pair.

With care he read the Cicero,
Just as the "jack" required;
He laughed and leaped and blessed the day
On which that "jack" was sired.

The "jack" did lead in Virgil's path, But Freshy did not know; He read it with the greatest joy, And thought it Cicero.

Now when reciting time arrived. The Freshy smiled with glee. And hugged himself with calm delight, To think that he was he. But sad to say, the teacher saw The Freshy's fond mistake, And told him that a zeroo-zo It would be best to take.

It was a Soph, and he was with his girl. Night calm, moon shining, gentle breezes blowing, stars twinkling. Almost midnight, and they were swinging on the gate. They spoke of love and—love until finally he courageously asked, "Miss—do you ever kiss?" "No! Never!" "Never?" "No, never!" "What! never!" "Well, hardly ever."

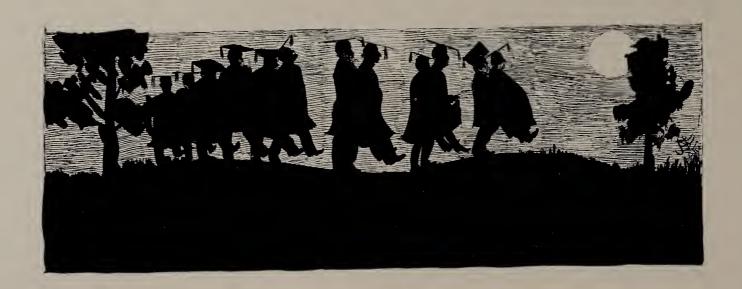

"Words that burn"—Rejected contributions.

"What shall I make of him?" he murmured.

It was a perplexing question that he asked himself about the boy, and one not to be decided hastily. The old man's hesitation to reach a decision was plainly discernable.

"Ha, ha! I have it now!" he exclaimed.

Two minutes afterward the cannibal chief gave orders to his chef to make a nice Fiji Stew of the boy, with potatoes on the side.

Che Profs in Caps and Gowns.

I dreamed a dream the other night
When everything was still,
I dreamed I saw the faculty
Parading on a hill,
Tired of their hum-drum life,
These Prof's desired renown,
Decided to make fame their sport
By sporting cap and gown.

They thought the many visitors
On great Commencement Day
Would deem them wise and learned men
When dressed in that array.
They thought to practice wearing them
So as to do it right,
And set the time lest others laugh.
Twelve on a moon-lit night.

They chose as place of rendezvous
A nearby wooded hill,
And gathered there quite stealthily
When all was quiet and still.
Each brought along the Oxford cap
And glory-giving garment,
And straight-way to donning them
This dozen Prof's all went,

"Which end's the top?" "Where are the sleeves?"

"I'm lost in this black sheet."

After some dozen such remarks
Their toilets were complete.

Then Dr. Jones as commander,
In twos his company lined,

And telling "Prep" to call out "hep."
He marched with Hume behind.

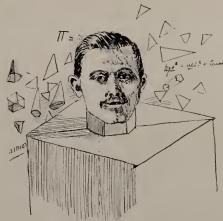

These solemn Prof's were thus arranged:
First there came puffing "Prep,"
And by his side winking Dupree
Kept strange time to his "hep."
Next Roman "Bondy" minced along,
Nor deigned a glance to drop
Upon the partner by his side
Whose bat-like wings did flop.

St. Peter ambled next in line,
Dr. Leavell by him stalked,
Then Lipscomb with his heavenward glance,
With Prof. Bugology walked.
Next the Governor with head erect,
Held so in conscious pride,
And the solemn visaged Chancellor
Treads firmly by his side.

Then Dr. Jones with his martial air,
With "Little Allie" near.
Who marched in a mathematical way.
These two brought up the rear,
Never before had the wood-sprites seen
So queerly sombre a sight,
While the sylphs of the winds made sport of their gowns.
And wound them around them tight.

Each fancied, then, the glory he'd win,
How he would be far-famed,
When, thus, on great Commencement Day,
His wisdom he proclaimed.
Alas for dreams! They little knew
What fate was near at hand.
Just then a herd of the bovine kind
Came rushing at the band.

Hair stood on end, caps flew to the wind.

Teeth chattered loud with fright.

Some fell on their knees, others "cooned" trees.

Some sought refuge in flight,
Each much-loved gown hung to them still,
Clung closer than a brother.

"Consarn the gown!!" "Audiable with the think!!!"

"Oh Lordy-help me." "Mother"-

"Thunder and lightning strike the beasts!!!"
"By Zeus! they'll get me sure!"
Stronger exclamations dyed the air
A very deep azure.

With such great earnestness and zeal
Did they run, climb and pray,
The "beasts" had not the heart to harm.

Turned, went another way.

Thus they escaped with life and limb,
All wiser homeward went
And strove with thread and court-plaster
To mend each scratch and rent.

And the learned Prof's, become more learned,

Judged they would seek renown By other means, less dangerous Than wearing cap and gown.

he Chapel Cook and Gym.

A Freshman fresh from the piney hills To classic Oxford came, With one voluminous roll of bills, One fearful thirst for fame.

So many a study had he so soon We stood in awe of him!

But ere the dawning of blissful June He chapel took and gym.

He in society led the van,
At dance and feast and game
A most inveterate ladies' man
Unawed by flood or flame!
O. he could prattle and he could sing
Till eyes and ears were dim
But back to college the hero bring;
He chapel took and gym.

For two long years and undaunted still He bore the Freshman's name When, though had parted the latest bill, His pockets bulged with fame! Yet he endured the oppressive load—In spirit strong and limb—The journey through to his sire's abode; He chapel took and gym.

There let him tell it, though e'er untired,
How he to greatness came—
Let every maiden with love be fired,
Each lover put to shame,
And let the inhabitants gather round,
And, wondering, gaze on him;
But whisper not in the wood profound;
"He Chapel took and Gym."

H Winter Cragedy.

A fair co-ed with smile so sweet,
With graceful step and queenly air,
And tresses fit for royal wear,
Came lightly dancing down the street.

With look assured and bow so low,
His classic features burning red,
Both love and foot ball in his head,
Came swiftly up a would-be beau.

Her pretty smile, her waving hair,
His foot ball record—all his pride—
Combined with love, made him decide
To show her home, this beauty fair.

Ah, cruel fate! beneath the snow

He did not see the icy glare—

But slipped—and wildly tore his hair;

She smiling watched him rise and go,

With humbled air.

"The past ever leaves it's traces behind."
Indeed we find that it's true;
Cover deeds over however we may,
There's left an indelible clue.

Things of the present may be quite apart,
And nothing could seem any clearer;
But we see little traces that near in the past,
They have been so very much nearer.

The way of the world—Its orbit.

Che Freshman.

The Freshman springeth up in the morning like the grass in the field and lo! upon him is the dew of ignorance and about his brain hangeth a dense cloud, but he knoweth not that he is ignorant nor that danger threateneth!

He maketh his way glad to the Latin room where he heareth long talks, called lectures, and his face groweth long. The bell ringeth and glad again, he hasteneth to his room that he may read his last letter from home and his spirit once more waxeth proud.

Then, after many minutes, he goeth to the English room and the Professor causeth him to feel his littleness and his erstwhile gay spirit is humbled.

He issueth from the recitation slowly and with a worn face, starteth down the steps on the left and gaineth confidence again when behold! a large hall to the left claimeth his attention and he entereth with much curiosity.

Time passeth away; his countenance stretcheth, groweth more lengthy; his eyes seemeth dull; his muscles becometh lax, he well nigh withers when a sweet sound he heareth. He hath been in the Math Hall and the bell hath rung.

He leaveth the room and walketh with difficulty, seeketh his bed, forgetteth his lunch and lieth in a stupor till three o'clock cometh when he draggeth himself to the Greek recitation; and behold! soon his eye closeth, his breath cometh in pieces, his countenance loseth color, he fainteth and is carried to his room.

In the morning he waketh subdued and so lived many days after, even unto this day, he liveth much subdued.

"Oh, John, go away from me, for I must make the rise in Sophomore Math. and Junior Chem."

Cobacco is my Cheme.

The bleak December winds are blowing,
Darkness spreads—it's growing late;
The cheerful flickering coals are glowing.
Painting pictures in the grate.
My pipe is lit and dimly shining
And upon my easy chair reclining
I am borne into a dream;
My mind is soothed, and vaguely whirling
In the smoke around me curling,
And Tobacco is my theme.

It's strange that what I've just been reading
Calls up things I've seen before;
Pictures hearts that once were bleeding,
Pictures faces loved of yore;
Makes haunting ghosts seem 'round me dancing,
And their eyes around me glancing,
'Til the darkness seems to gleam;
But again the live-coals glimmer
And my thoughts grow dimmer, dimmer,
'Til—Tobacco is my theme.

On this I muse; before me tumble
Cities shining bright as day.

All earth's treasures seem to crumble
Into dust, and pass away.

I feel. but cannot tell my feeling—
Curls of smoke around me reeling,
Mind half-started on a dream;
So my soul in such delighting
Only sees in smoky writing
This: Tobacco is my theme.

Five thousand soldiers "also ran."

Love in a Cot.

Little girl, little girl, you can't fool me.
No matter how pretty you be;
Though your eyes be brown
I'll give you a frown
And I'll swear that my heart is free.
For you, little girl, are so, so poor,
Miss Midas is so, so rich,
In Cupid's own face I will slam the door.
And I'll shut you both out, little witch.

They may talk of love with its charms divine,

And surely it sounds very fine;
It's all very well,

But this I can tell.

That I don't want a bit in mine.

I've heard before of love in a cot

And living on one brown crust,

But I should prefer a big corner lot

And the shekels—to loving on trust.

Little girl, little girl, I ask in vain
Why the rich girls all are so plain,
Why those we adore
Are pretty and poor—
I ask you again and again;
Miss Midas, sure, is a millionaire.
She comes of a grand old stock—
But you are so young, so sweet and so fair!—
Miss Midas has a face like a clock

In a coach today Miss Midas will ride,
And I am to sit by her side,
So gay and so fine.
I'll never repine,
I'll declare that my love has died.
Ah, no, ah no, though you trudge the street
I'll wake with a fit and start.
As a poor little girl with wee, wee feet
Comes a-tripping straight into my heart!

There is untold wealth in your golden curls, Your teeth are a casket of pearls:
The figures are trite,
Yet I'm sure I'm right
In calling you richest of girls:
But I think of poverty's bitter ills.
And then I'm ever so blue:
I sigh as I think of the unpaid bills
And the note that is soon to be due!

Never mind, little girl, we'll live on love. In the fairylands fair above;
At Castles in Spain
We will blissfully reign
The envy of all, little dove.
Though creditors come and tear their hair
We never will worry more.
We'll laugh at the chains of the debtor's lair
While the other man paces the floor!

Miss Midas may go and ride as she will
And misers gorge gold till they fill,
With their musty books
And their crusty looks
And with many a teeming till.
But Cupid comes once more to my door
With you. my sweet little witch.
Miss Midas is plain and ever so poor,
While my darling is pretty and rich!
—WALTER MALONE.

A Few "Don'ts" from Reported Experiences.

Don't forget to be gentle and affectionate.

Don't be surprised at anything that happens.

Don't fail to complain that bright light hurts your eyes.

Don't consume less than an hour bidding her good bye.

Don't fail to watch every movement and expression, and don't allow yourself to be bluffed.

Don't sit at extreme end of sofa, if on a sofa, and don't use two chairs when one is sufficient.

Don't make a call without a goodly supply of "blarney," and don't forget to use it judiciously.

Don't wear your hair long, so that it will look disarranged should a "third party" unexpectedly enter.

Don't neglect to look out for the stray tresses which may gather on your coat, as it may save embarrassment.

Don't start until you have "sized up" your partner, and then don't go too fast, and don't go too slow.

Don't wear a stiff bosomed shirt, as it rattles too much under pressure, nor a standing collar, as it may cut your neck when in affectionate attitudes.

Danger (?)

"We are lost!" he then repeated, As he staggers back and falls,

"There is pisen in those dishes.

Those that hold the cod fish balls.

"They are made from last night's simon.
Which were held by can of tin;
And the pisen's in the solder
That which kept them tight within."

Then the hungry student whispered. As he took another ball,

"We'll be bluffed by such maneuvers When we've eaten up them all."

So we burst out into laughter,
And we praised the noble lad,
For we knew there was no danger
To those who'd boarded where we had.

"We are lost!" the landlord shouted,

"Oh! I've spoken much too late."

We were crowded at the table.

Not a soul would dare to speak,

There was hair upon the butter.

So we munched there in silence.

And a hide in place of steak.

Each one busy at his plate.

The Dandy's Creed.

I believe that a gentleman is any person with a fine suit of clothes, a fancy walking cane in his hand, and a watch in his pocket.

I believe that adoration is only due to a fine woman, or her purse; and that a woman can keep one secret—namely, her age.

I believe that my character would be lost beyond redemption if I did not change my dress four times a day, wear a fancy neck tie and smoke fine cigars.

I believe that playing at rouge et noir is the only honorable way of getting a livelihood; that a man of honor never pays his creditors, because "they are a pack of scoundrels," and that buying goods means ordering them without the purpose of paying.

I believe that debt is a necessary evil.

I believe that the word dress means reputation; that husband implies a person engaged to pay a woman's debts; that economy means pusillanimity; and that any person talking about decency is a bore.

I believe that there is not a cleverer or a prettier fellow in the town than myself; and that, as far as regards the women, I am altogether irresistible.

Questions.

Do you hear the birds a-singing
All about the campus trees?
Do you hear sweet voices ringing,
Floating, drifting, on the breeze?

Do you see the flowers leaping

Just as if they were inspired?

Do you see the blushes creeping

On a Freshman worn and tired?

Do the skies seem all much brighter, And all faces brighter still? Do the shoes of all fit tighter, And all work with greater will?

Does the campus have more beauty
Than it used to have of yore?
Has the college boy a duty
That he never knew before?

Do the sunbeams dance and glitter
In this new inspirer's eyes?
Do the birds and leaflets twitter
With a gay and glad surprise?

Is every campus ringing,
With the sounds of dainty tread?
And are all the breezes singing:
"Ah, my pretty, fair 'co-ed.'?"

A Student's Soliloguy a la Hamlet.

To study or not to study that is the question: Whether 'tis better in the end to suffer The threats and reproaches of the folks at home. Or to take my books, get up my lessons, And so avoid them? To study—to loaf; No more; and, by loafing, to say we end The great labors, and thousand incident shocks That a student is heir to—'tis a consummation Devoutly to be wished. To study—to loaf;— To loaf! perchance to fail: aye, there's the rub: For in that failing on "exam.," the reports that go home Make us wish to shuffle off this mortal coil. This makes us pause: there's the question That makes calamity of college life; For who wants to get the Chancellor's notes and demerits too. Fault finding letters, the students' gags. To lose his best girl's love, his friends' respect, To get the insolence of the "Prof's." and the spurns That patient merit of the loafer takes, When he. himself, might his quietus make With a bare effort? Who would examples work. To grunt and sweat under all night long But that the dread of something tomorrow, The prison bound room, from whose doors No smiling student returns, puzzles the will, And makes us rather bear our loafer's ills Than fly to students' ills we know not of? Thus the "Prof's." do make cowards of us all; And thus the balmy air of college life Is tainted through with the monstrous fear of study, And enterprises of great fun and merriment, With this regard, their currents turn away, And lose the name of Pleasure.

H Classic Miss.

He'd sworn that he would always love her.
Through all earth's storms be true;
He'd long been taught by skies above her
To love those eyes of blue.

He toid of all her queenly beauty
And of her merits rare;
He said he thought it was his duty
To love this co-ed fair.

"Ah. indeed! and why thus prate you?"

Exclaimed the classic Miss;

For 'thou shalt love all those who hate you,'

The Bible teaches this."

(Exit He.)

H Caboratory Incident.

All that is sweet.
And is lovely to meet.
Which nothing can ever defile:
Which is purest and best.
And with power is blessed.
Took shape in a beautiful smile.

For once in my gloom,
In the chemistry room,
My solution was clear all the while:
'Till a maiden was seen,
And pure crystals of green,
Were then formed by her beautiful smile.

H Ballad of College Days.

There was a time, we read,
In by-gone ages, when
The Gods were flesh indeed,
And made their homes with men.
'Twas pleasant living then
And joyful were their ways;
But give to me instead
Those good old college days!

The Gods came not, but we
Off after strange ones went;
Olympian revelry
Filled up the hours we spent.
Occasionally we blent
The night-time with affrays
With divers city guilds.
Those good old college days!

We held high converse, for In reading for degrees, Our interlocutor Was grand old Socrates; And tough Thucydides His narrative did raise; But that was rather rare Those good old college days!

One spectre, grim and gaunt,
Did fill us with affright;
Our wakeful hours did haunt
And poisoned all the night.
We strove with main and might.
We wanted not the bays;
We knew degrees would end
Those good old college days!

Reclining gracefully on a divan, the artist's model had become quite confidential.

- "Oh, I sometimes grow so tired of life, I sometimes think of taking one of those Persian daggers that ornament your wall—"
- "And committing suicide? We all have those spells, but I wouldn't if I were you."
  - "Why not?"

He thought to appeal to her aesthetic sense.

"You would cut a pretty figure now, wouldn't you, stabbing yourself with a knife like a common—"

A smile appeared upon her face.

"Yes, I think I should," she answered with a glance at her shapely form.

The longer she gazed at herself the greater it seemed would be the crime of cutting such a figure, and she finally abandoned the idea altogether.
