This could be a scholarship, a graduate or post-graduate fellowship, or some other type of grant to the institution that will result in an opportunity for you, perhaps through a graduate assistantship. Be sure to include all of the following information, where applicable: sponsor name, program name, due date, type of funding (e.g., scholarship, fellowship, grant, etc.), maximum amount of award (and how much you plan to ask for), eligible costs (for what you are allowed to use the money), who receives the award (the student or the institution), who submits the application (the student or the institution), eligibility requirements, anticipated duration of the award (start and end dates), review criteria, anticipated number of awards, and any other relevant information we should be aware of. Please provide a URL link to the opportunity, and also tell us how you learned about the external opportunity.

Review & Competition

- ORSP will pre-review all applications and disqualify those that are not compliant with the instructions
- ORSP, in coordination with the Graduate School, will conduct the review of the External Opportunity and score that.
- The Graduate School will enlist reviewers from faculty and staff from around campus, to judge the GSC Research Project component.

Both Parts will be scored: 50 total points possible.

1. A $1K proposal to conduct a project at UM.

<- The GSC Research Project
up to 30 points possible

2. A proposal to APPLY for external funding to do something entirely else.

<- The External Opportunity
up to 20 points possible

Generally, the highest scoring applicants will:

- Be awarded $1K to conduct their GSC Project.
- Be expected to apply to the external opportunity.
  - Ext. Opp. Application does not have to be SUCCESSFUL
  - Even if successful, student does not have to accept.

Review Criteria (50 points maximum)

GSC Research Project: Merit (10 points)

Does the narrative make a compelling case, understandable to a reader from a related but different discipline, that the proposed work will advance knowledge and understanding in a way that compliments, or fills a gap in, work that has come before?

What is the novelty or originality of the proposed work or approach?

Review Criteria (50 points maximum)

---

GSC Research Project: Soundness of Plan (10 points)

Does the narrative make a compelling case that the project will be completed as proposed within the project period, using the resources available?

Are potential risks identified, and are contingencies in place to mitigate those risks?

Review Criteria (50 points maximum)

Overall Clarity (10 points)

Is the proposal compelling, easy to understand, and grammatically correct?

Review Criteria (50 points maximum)

External Opportunity: Merit (10 points)

Is it clear that the applicant has researched and understands all the key requirements of the external opportunity? Is the opportunity appropriate for the student's stage and program of study?

External Opportunity: Soundness of Plan (10 points)

Given what was written, how likely does it seem that the student will be able to develop and submit an on-time, compliant application or proposal?

How competitive is the proposal likely to be?

Finding Funding Opportunities

Several institutional resources are available to support faculty seeking funding opportunities for their research, educational, or other scholarly projects.

ORSP invests between $20K and $25K a year to maintain an annual subscription to PIVOT, a large, searchable, and user-customizable database of funding opportunities in the arts, commerce and industry, education, humanities, health, and sciences. Faculty can set up their profiles to search for funding opportunities that match their interests. These profiles can be saved and easily, manually re-run as often as the faculty member likes, or they can be set up to run automatically every week and to e-mail the new "hits" to the faculty member. Either way, PIVOT is an efficient and accurate method to find funding prospects. It does require an hour or two to set up your profile the first time, and ORSP is happy to train and assist faculty in setting up their profiles.

Click on <https://pivot.cos.com/funding/search> to get started searching for funding opportunities. More info about the UM PIVOT subscription is available here: https://www.research.olemiss.edu/proposal-development/cos\_temp. ORSP offers several PIVOT workshops each semester, and can also provide these workshops "on-demand" for your department or unit. To view the upcoming training schedule and sign up for a PIVOT workshop, click <http://www.research.olemiss.edu/upcoming-presentations>. To request a workshop on-demand, e-mail research@olemiss.edu.

The College of Liberal Arts has secured permission to link to an Ohio State University curated spreadsheet of many funding opportunities. To browse this excellent resource, see <http://libarts.olemiss.edu/research-resources/>, and click on "External Funding Sources Hosted by OSU".

Most funding agencies have websites and listserves through which you can learn about their specific funding opportunities. These pages/lists are easy to find with Web searches. Following are just a few:

- NSF: <https://www.nsf.gov/funding/>
- NIH: <https://grants.nih.gov/funding/index.htm>
- NASA: <https://science.nasa.gov/researchers/sara/grant-solicitations>

For Limited Submissions opportunities, ORSP's Limited Submissions Protocol applies. See <https://www.research.olemiss.edu/resources/limitedsubmissions>.

Graduate Student Research Program

The Graduate Student Council (GSC) seeks grant proposals from currently enrolled graduate students in any discipline each Spring. The GSC Research Fund was established to assist ongoing or future graduate student research at The University of Mississippi. Official announcement will be sent via the Graduate School and posted in the News section and on social media.

Graduate Student Research Grant (G01)

Sponsored By: University of Mississippi, Office of Research and Sponsored Programs, the Graduate School and the Graduate Student Council

Purpose:

The Graduate Student Council (GSC) welcomes proposals from currently enrolled graduate students in any discipline. The GSC Research Fund was established to assist ongoing and future graduate student research at the University of Mississippi. The Fund is meant to support research for which departmental funds are not available. It is required that each applicant supplement their Graduate Student Research Program application with an application to an external funding source. It is important that this program present graduate students at the University of Mississippi the opportunity for and the experience that accompanies applying for funding through many different avenues.

Congratulations to all of this year's winners!

GRADUATE STUDENT COUNCIL RESEARCH GRANTS

Grants from the Graduate Student Council Research Fund increase the marketability, competitiveness and opportunities of Ole Miss graduate students; increase the number of proposals from and awards for graduate students; and expand the ability of graduate students to conduct research and/or creative or innovation projects to a degree not possible with departmental funds alone.

The $1,000 competitive research grants, funded by the UM Graduate School and Office of Research and Sponsored Programs, support the research, study and creative scholarship of both masters and doctoral students.
