9-21-1962

Annotated article by Charles Whaley sent to Courier-Journal, Louisville, KY, 21 September 1962

Charles Whaley

Follow this and additional works at: https://egrove.olemiss.edu/west_union_med

Part of the Journalism Studies Commons, and the United States History Commons

Recommended Citation
https://egrove.olemiss.edu/west_union_med/13

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Western Union Telegram Collection at eGrove. It has been accepted for inclusion in Telegrams to Media Outlets by an authorized administrator of eGrove. For more information, please contact egrove@olemiss.edu.
Oxford, Miss., Sept. 21--Whaley--It doesn't seem quite right. Surely some tangible trace should remain here at the University of Mississippi of the furor Thursday over a Negro's attempt to enroll as a student.

But even that shattering episode, which seems certain to deal the death blow to segregation in the state's schools, appeared Whaley to have been absorbed and forgotten in placid Mississippi fashion.

On their first day of classes the students at Ole Miss roamed the sunny campus looking just like students anywhere else. Something seemed wrong.

What were they thinking? Some politely declined to talk but many more were willing to speak their minds. Some were identified. The battle.

The general feeling seems to be that it is out of their hands. They are depending on Governor Ross Barnett to keep out Negroes and they are wild in praise of him. "He's all but God to us," one Mississippi student cried enthusiastically as he sat with a group of fraternity brothers.

Yet if it comes to admitting Negroes or closing down the university the students would probably prefer to admit Negroes. The boy who compared Barnett to God said he would rather abolish Ole Miss than go to class with Negroes.

But he estimated the students--about 5,000 are enrolled--are split 50-50 on this. The verdict of the student newspaper: "the students have almost overwhelmingly expressed a desire to continue their education without any interruption."
And the faculty?

It has not raised its voice although the students and professor agree it is predominantly liberal on the question of mixed classes.

Most faculty members are non-Mississippians, said, buy thought that made little difference, faculty member, he said.

The professor called Barnett "the most ignorant governor we've ever had."

"Everything Barnett has done has been wrong constitutionally, historically, and logically."

"I was disappointed that the state college board did not stand up to Barnett," said Dr. John D. Williams, a native of Newport, Ky., and former University of Kentucky professor--will bow to the Federal Court (which has cited him for contempt) and admit Meredith."

"Oddly enough we have had Negroes as students here in the past but they were not admitted as Negroes but as Puerto Ricans. There was no problem."

Ole Miss also has a number of foreign students, some of them dark-skinned. But they usually stay to themselves, said the professor.
Some of the students vow there will be violence if Meredith succeeds in enrolling. It came dangerously near Thursday, they said, when one boy began tossing rocks at Meredith. "I was frightened," acknowledged the fraternity man who lauded Barnett. But he said he had not been frightened enough to change his views on race.

Meredith will surely be killed sooner or later if he becomes a student, asserted the fraternity boys.

Their greatest fury was reserved, however, for Attorney-General Robert Kennedy, whom they regard as the villain in the case. Kennedy, they swore, probably would have been killed by students if he had appeared to help Meredith enroll.

Are there any students who could be called liberals on the race question? There are.

Some, the boys acknowledged, but a small group—"and even though they say they're liberal, they're still segregationist."

###