Tupelo Pride 2019 Exhibit

Amy McDowell
University of Mississippi

Jessica Wilkerson
University of Mississippi

Maddie Shappley
University of Mississippi

David Hooper Schultz
University of Mississippi

Follow this and additional works at: https://egrove.olemiss.edu/queerms

Part of the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Studies Commons, and the Oral History Commons

Recommended Citation

McDowell, Amy; Wilkerson, Jessica; Shappley, Maddie; and Schultz, David Hooper, "Tupelo Pride 2019 Exhibit" (2019). Queer Mississippi Oral History Project. 34.
https://egrove.olemiss.edu/queerms/34

This Presentation is brought to you for free and open access by the Sarah Isom Center for Women and Gender Studies at eGrove. It has been accepted for inclusion in Queer Mississippi Oral History Project by an authorized administrator of eGrove. For more information, please contact egrove@olemiss.edu.
Tupelo Pride 2019 Exhibit

Summary of files available as “Additional Downloads”

The Invisible Histories Project-Mississippi launched during Tupelo Pride 2019's opening event at the Link Centre.

IHP-MS had an information table with two pop-up exhibits: 1) a selection of record covers from the collection of DJ Prince Charles (Charles Smith), now housed in the University of Mississippi Libraries Archives and Special Collections, and 2) a selection of "ethno-poems", curated by students of Dr. Jessica Wilkerson's Oral History of Southern Social Movements class (S ST 560).
Photos from Tupelo Pride 2019

Files (L to R) Photo of advocacy tables; Photo of stickers for sale; Photo of archival material, IHP exhibit at Tupelo Pride 2019
Record Exhibit: DJ Prince Charles

DJ Prince Charles Collection

These LPs are from the “DJ Prince Charles” collection in Archives and Special Collections at the University of Mississippi. The collection is part of Invisible Histories Project – Mississippi. The Prince Charles collection consists of 864 vinyl dance tracks and remixes, pop singles, and full-length albums from the 80s, 90s, and early 2000s that belonged to Charles Smith, a record aficionado and DJ from Booneville, Mississippi.

Smith set the soundtrack for queer life in Mississippi. He spun records at the short-lived venue in rural Palmetto called “Cow Patties,” a bare bones building that sat in the middle of roaming cows; Crossroads in Columbus, O’Hara’s in Shannon, and then Rumors in Shannon, Mississippi. When Rumors first opened, Smith’s Technics turntables and Coffin—a padded transportable case that holds turntables and mixers—were permanent fixtures of the bar. Rick Gladish describes Smith as someone who took great pride in his role as a DJ and in his records. Smith favored remixes of 70s and 80s dance tracks, but he also purchased Top 40 hits for the drag shows. Smith took great care of his collection and insisted that others do the same. The records in this collection are in superb condition.
Invisible Histories Project-Mississippi
Launched during Tupelo Pride, 2019

On October 11, 2019, the Invisible Histories Project Mississippi (IHP-MS) launched at Tupelo Pride’s opening event, held at the Link Centre. The mission of IHP-MS is to document and preserve the history of LGBTQ Mississippians. Co-project directors Amy McDowell (sociology) and I., and graduate assistants Maddle Shapley (sociology) and Hooper Schultz (Southern Studies) were joined by Joshua Burford and Maegen Sullivan, the directors of the first and primary IHP site in Alabama. Students from McDowell’s and my graduate seminars in sociology and Southern Studies also attended.

The Tupelo Pride organizers gave the IHP-MS team the opportunity to spread the word about the project and invite people to participate. We had an information table and two pop-up exhibits. One exhibit disseminated a selection of record covers from the collection of Charles Smith, known as DJ Prince Charles, a record aficionado who provided the soundtrack to several gay bars in North Mississippi in the 1990s and early 2000s. His record collection is now housed in Archives and Special Collections at the University of Mississippi. For the second exhibit, Shapley and Schultz curated “story-poems” from oral history interviews that they completed as part of the Queer Mississippi Oral History Project, directed by McDowell and me. The main event was a drag show, featuring local performers and encored by GoDiva Holliday, who was also interviewed for the oral history project. The following day the IHP-MS team attended the second annual Tupelo Pride Festival at Fairpark in downtown Tupelo. Many people stopped by the table to see the archival documents—magazines, photographs, newsletters, and memorabilia—from exhibit and to discuss donating materials or recording an oral history interview. On Sunday, McDowell and I wrapped up the IHP-MS launch at the Unitarian Universalist Congregation of Oxford, where we were invited to speak about the project’s mission and goals. With funding from a Mellon grant and in collaboration with IHP directors Joshua Burford and Maegen Sullivan, we founded IHP-MS in April 2019. With support from the Ison Center, Archives and Special Collections, and the Center for the Study of Southern Culture (which has included the project in its Future of the South Initiative), IHP-MS hopes to expand the reach of the project. If you are interested in learning more about the project or possibly donating manuscript collections or print materials, please contact Josie Wilkerson (jwilkerson@olemiss.edu).

IHP-MS will be hosting a one-day symposium, “LGBTQ Activism and Advocacy in Mississippi,” on the campus of the University of Mississippi on Thursday, April 30, 3:00–5:00 p.m. At the event, cohosted with the Ison Center and part of the Oxford Pride schedule, we will hear from advocates and activists about their work to make Mississippi a more welcoming, safe, and queer state for LGBTQ+ people. Check the Center’s website for more information.

Josie Wilkerson

File: Photo of Hooper Schultz, Maddie Shapley, and Moe Bristow
The Future for Mississippi
Compiled by Maddie Shappley

When I met Lena Cornill early in August, she brought smoothies. Upon meeting, I felt as though I had been friends with her my entire life. Her robust laugh filled the air as we sat down on two black futon chairs. I listened carefully as Lena shared her life story. As the interview wrapped up, I asked Lena what she wants to see in the future for Mississippi and the LGBTQ community.

You know what I would like to see.

[mutual laughter]

I would like the state to look like

The Coffee House.

Where we all figure out there’s a place for us.

And as long as you don’t try to take another person’s place, [pause] from them,

It will be alright.

But we have not done that. We have continued to believe the lie.

The First Time I Dressed Up in Drag
Compiled by Maddie Shappley

When I met Eric “GoDiva” White in the Link Centre parking lot, he was carefree and making big plans for Tupelo. We roamed the halls chatting until we found a room for the interview. Eric shared moments that led him to GoDiva and Rumors bar. Here he shares a story from his childhood when he first dressed up in drag for Halloween.

I would always dress up in drag.
The first time I got in drag, I was eight years old and I asked my mom, “Can I please dress up as a woman for Halloween?” And she was like, “Sure.”

So she let me [pause] wear her little blue suede shoes — and [pause] I wore pantyhose and — I would have killed my dad — I wore a skirt.

I worked this robe looking top with a tie and then a T-shirt on my head for hair. This blue eyeshadow and her lipstick and all that stuff.

I’d get in trouble all the time playing in her makeup.

But I was eight years old. We went trick or treating, and when we had to go to the preacher’s house, I was supposed to pretend like I was Moses. So that’s what I did.

[laughter]
He’d open the door, I was on my knees in front of him, with praying hands. I was really like—

“Please don’t recognize me as a girl right now.”

I had a scarf, tied around my head.

I remember it like it was yesterday.
Firm Believer
Compiled by Hooper Schultz

P.J. Newton and I sat in her living room as the blue glare of the TV screen never bowed around the corners of us two. P.J. took a deep breath, looking at me every so often, but for the most part she pouted too far on the distance.

I did grow up attending church every Sunday.
And I’m just a firm believer in
you know
worshiping Jesus Christ.
I do. I do believe in Him.
I read my Bible and I pray every day.
I’m just a gay Christian.
So not really any different.

Just my lifestyle.
my sexual preference
and partners
are the only thing that pretty much
sets me apart from everybody else.

And that’s really all
about it all
just what it’s about.

Just people just need to be themselves.
I think that whatever you want to — you dream and whatever you want to be — you should try to achieve that.
and not let anybody stand in your way.
I can’t.

I fought for years
and years
and years.
Every chance I got
try to be better.

What’s Going to Happen to Me?
Compiled by Hooper Schultz

Stay Newson and I sat at a large wooden table at the Let County library. She talked for a long time, and we laughed a lot — about family, life, first loves, and coming to terms with who we are. Although she could laugh about these things now, none of them had been uncomplicated.

My coming out was a long drawn out process
over many years and many different layers —
— before I finally just got to the point and said:
"I’m done."
You know, this is it.
Once and for all.
This is who I am.

Deal with it or move on.

But my fear for so long was the fear of rejection.
You know of being kicked out of a group.
Being kicked out of the family.
Being kicked out of a job.
Being kicked out of where I lived.

Which were very —
— are still real things today
but men more so
during that coming-out time for me.

And once again
there were no role models.
There was nothing being shown anywhere
about this process.

Did we know Elton John was gay? Yeah.
But he didn’t talk about it.

Did we know Melissa Etheridge was gay? Yeah.
She didn’t talk about it.

ELLEN

I mean all those things.
It was like
the secret society
that we knew.

But if they can’t come out and say it,
then I sure can’t.

Because they’ve got money
and wealth
and power.

You know, what’s going to happen to me?