9-30-1962

Annotated article by Jack Roach to Charleston News and Courier, 30 September 1962

Jack L. Roach (1925-)

Follow this and additional works at: https://egrove.olemiss.edu/west_union_med

Part of the Journalism Studies Commons, and the United States History Commons

Recommended Citation
https://egrove.olemiss.edu/west_union_med/74

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Western Union Telegram Collection at eGrove. It has been accepted for inclusion in Telegrams to Media Outlets by an authorized administrator of eGrove. For more information, please contact egrove@olemiss.edu.
NITE PRESS COLLECT-

TO: Managing Editor
   Charleston News and Courier
   Charleston, S.C.

by A special Correspondent

OXFORD, MISS. - Federal marshals - 200 strong - who arrived here yesterday won't fare the finest of accommodations.

In fact, their needs will be taken care of by an Army outfit and Army chow appears to be the likely menu.

A tent city was set up about ten miles north of here in a cleared out area on a federal reservation. The camp, located about three miles off the main highway, can be reached only by a winding, unpaved, narrow road that chokes any motorist with red dust as he drives over it.

The 70th Eng. En. from Fort Campbell

One hundred and seventy men of the 70th Eng. En. from Fort Campbell set up the tent city and will provide logistical support for the federal men. These needs were described as "...tents, bedding, food and gas and oil for vehicles," according to Capt. B.A. Nale, assistant information officer on the scene.

The supplies will be "...Army type" he said.

Some members of the Army unit are airborne troops but Capt. Nale emphasized they were there as specialists in certain fields such as medicine and communications.

He also emphasized the unit is at the camp solely to take care of the marshals.

This report was at the camp yesterday afternoon as a seven-truck convey left the camp at approximately 2:15 p.m.

Following the convey over a circuitous 22-mile route - ever mile of it
The convey team took a circuituous 22-mile route - every mile of it on roads as bad as the one leading to the camp - it ended up at the airport here. A much shorter route on a paved highway was available but this main highway leads through the town of Oxford.

The time was perfect since the convey arrived at the airport as five transport planes, carrying the marshals, circled overhead.

The marshals did not immediately embark but when they did they were loaded into trucks and after another indeterminable period were then whisked to the university campus.

It took one DC-4, three DC-3's and a C-46 to transport the marshals to Oxford. Consequently the seven Army trucks were hardly sufficient to carry them to their final destination.

They were jammed in - the fortunate on seats alongside the truck, the others standing or kneeling on the floor. The 84-degree heat soon took its toll on the men since it was considerably hotter under the heavy tarpaulins over the trucks so they were soon removed.

The marshals were dressed in civilians clothes, each wearing a white helmet with "U.S. Marshal" stamped on it in black paint. Each wore a yellow vest which contained in its pockets what appeared to be gas grenades and each carried a long night stick.

A number of the marshals were armed with tear gas guns...
A number of the marshals held tear gas guns at the ready.

As evidence of the careful planning which went into the maneuver, very shortly after the trucks were loaded an Air Force jet transport plane arrived carrying Nicholas Katzenbach, deputy attorney general; Edwin H. Guthman, Attorney General Robert Kennedy's press secretary; Norbert Schlei, legal counsel for the Justice Department; Harold Reis, deputy attorney general and Dean Markham, Justice Dept. special agent.

Further evidence of the advanced planning that went into the maneuver was offered by a civilian who lives close by the tent city area. He said that last Friday a helicopter landed on the site and surveyed it.

Jack Roach