Wagster Pettus receives Silver Em award

Emily Wagster Pettus, a veteran journalist in the state of Mississippi, received the Silver Em award from the University of Mississippi School of Journalism and New Media last night. Silver Em is the highest award the university gives to journalists. As a student at the university, Pettus worked for The Daily Mississippian and The Oxford Eagle. She went on to report for the Vicksburg Evening Post and The Clarion-Ledger, and she is now a reporter for the Associated Press in Jackson.

Student charged with creating fake IDs

TAYLOR VANCE

THEDMNEWS@GMAIL.COM

An Ole Miss student was arrested and charged with manufacturing false identifications by the Oxford Police Department on Monday.

Liam Little, a sophomore political science major from Ontario, Canada, was taken into custody at the Jefferson Apartments when the property manager noticed "suspicious activity" occurring at the apartments, according to a press release from OPD. Officers discovered a large fake identification manufacturing system at the apartment.

Little was transported to the Lafayette County Detention Center, where he was given a bond of $75,000 by a Justice Court judge.

Officials at the Lafayette County Detention Center did not disclose whether Little was still in custody or had posted bond.

Little's arrest comes after the passage of the alcohol safety and security ordinance, with which city officials and the Oxford Police Department have tried to decrease the use of fake IDs to gain entry into bars.

The law, which was passed in September and took effect Jan. 1, requires customers entering a bar to scan their IDs.

ASB campaigns cited for violations

More than 150 students gathered in front of the Lyceum starting at 7 p.m. Tuesday night to await the Associated Student Body executive election results. Nearly two hours passed before Interim Attorney General Anya Czerwinski announced the outcome. The delay resulted from campaign violation hearings involving vice presidential candidate Sarah Doty and an undisclosed senatorial candidate.

"We heard two violations concerning a candidate for a Senate seat and a candidate for vice president," Czerwinski said. "One candidate for the Senate was disqualified, and a vice presidential candidate was exonerated."

While Czerwinski did not confirm the name of the vice presidential candidate who received a violation, Doty identified herself as the candidate in question.

Doty said a freshman who was part of her extended

Universities should have better advising

JONATHAN LOVELADY
THEDMOPINION@GMAIL.COM

It's time to prepare to graduate, and you find out you need another course that you or your adviser did not know about. Or you're an underclassman, and you find out halfway through a course that you never needed it in the first place and could have taken another course to get ahead on your major. These are the problems that countless students have faced during their time at Ole Miss that have caused frustration, wasted funds and delayed many graduations.

Thankfully, I have been guided by advisers who made an effort to guide me through the curriculum, but many aren't so lucky.

No one can deny that missed courses cost time and money, adding to the stress of many college students who already have to deal with full-time course loads, extracurricular activities and Greek life — not to mention a part- or full-time job. There is no doubt that missed courses and ineffective advising contributed to 2014 data stating that 48.3% of college students graduate in four years and 64.2% graduate in six years.

Though many factors play into these rates, which have increased over time, it goes without saying that a major fix would be a better academic advising system.

If we keep the current advising system, advisers should be trained a set amount of hours per semester to keep up with catalog changes and new ways to support their advisees. My issue with this proposal is that it further strains such advisers who already have a burden of teaching, keeping up with research demands or tending to administrative duties.

A close relationship between adviser and advisee would allow the two parties to focus on developing themselves and, more importantly, on keeping up retention efforts. So, who would deal with advising? Well, employing more academic advisers whose sole job is to monitor students' progress, recognize if a student is failing early and reach out in time to provide resources is integral.

The problem is that, while this type of academic adviser does exist for some students, that is not the case for all students on this campus.

Many would say this is a form of coddling, but many universities already employ similar systems to monitor their students. They have been shown to increase timely graduation rates and improve students' course loads.

If we truly cared about our students and their mental health, then we would adjust our advising system accordingly so that students would no longer be lost in the gears of our institution. A few extra dollars a semester to better prepare our current advising system or hire more advisers would save hundreds of dollars, many tears and countless hours of time.

campaign team had waited outside of residence halls on campus encouraging people to vote using his laptop and directing students to vote for Doty in the vice presidential race.

“He was just directing them to who he knew in the election,” Doty said. “(My campaign team) had sent the rules that morning, and we had really put an emphasis on letting people have their own choice. That’s what this whole thing is about.”

Doty said she had no knowledge of what the student was doing and did not direct the student to campaign in that way. She also said she places blame for the violation on the student for not following the rules.

“I hadn’t really met him before the campaign started,” Doty said. “He hadn’t been around elections, maybe, for very long. He didn’t know that you really have to be following the rules when they say to follow the rules.”

While she was allowed to remain in the race, the violation penalty carries a $25 fine and requires Doty to complete 11 hours of community service, according to Doty.

Doty said she was confused upon receiving a phone call from the attorney general’s office while in front of the Lyceum with the rest of the candidates, and she said Czerwinski directed her to stand behind the Lyceum until brought inside.

“It all ended up okay, obviously, because I’m in the runoff and didn’t get disqualified,” Doty said. “I do community service all the time just for fun, honestly, so it’s no sweat off our backs.”

Czerwinski said she would not elaborate on the details of the violation hearings in order for the attorney general’s office to avoid possibly influencing the runoff election.

Doty will face off against Charlotte Shackelford for the office of vice president today after garnering 28.12% of the vote to Shackelford’s 30.48% in Tuesday’s election.

The next closest candidate to Doty was J.R. Riojas, who won 25.46% of the vote. The difference between Doty and Riojas was only 143 votes.

“I am looking forward to Thursday’s election going smoothly,” Czerwinski said. “We have great candidates facing against each other for vice president and president.”

Students can vote online through their myOleMiss accounts between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. today by opening the “Get Involved” tab and clicking on “Vote in Student Elections.”

'Balls Ball' celebrates sports, LGBTQ community

KERRIGAN HERRET
THEDMFEATURES@GMAIL.COM

Since the early 2000s, Code Pink has hosted dozens of events to provide an opportunity for fellowship to the LGBTQ community in Oxford.

Oxford also does not have a designated gay bar, so Code Pink offers that venue of acceptance to students and locals.

Tomorrow night, the group will host Code Pink: The Balls Ball (LGBTQ Sports Bar) at Proud Larry's from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. The event invites members of the "LGBTQ community and friends to enjoy a full night of dancing, drinking and community bonding" in a sports-themed environment, according to the event listing.

Blake Summers, the director of Code Pink, said that the events are designed to provide a safe platform for DJs, drag queens and dancing, and The Balls Ball will be no different.

"Basically, this theme is a dialogue about how groups shouldn't have to fear sports and that we are all capable of greatness if we push past social discomforts," Summers said.

Summers said that Code Pink has grown over the years, and he believes that the events have a bright future.

"The themes continue to get more intricate, the audience is growing, and the Code Pink veterans keep coming back," Summers said.

One of these Code Pink veterans is Justin Tyler. Tyler, better known by his stage name Ms. Dee Pression, is a local drag entertainer, a member of the LGBTQ community and one of the founders of the Gay-Straight Alliance at Northeast Mississippi Community College. He will be performing at The Balls Ball.

"I want to be original with (my performance). I want to do something everyone will enjoy," Tyler said. "I like to do music that will emotionally connect with people and give them a positive feeling."

Tyler's first performance for Code Pink was at the last event, titled "Space Cowboy,"

“The energy, love, warmth and acceptance from Code Pink just inside that room is unreal. ... The acceptance was different than anywhere else.”

Justin Tyler
Local drag entertainer performing at tonight's event which was an "intergalactic-themed drag show." He is booked for the next two Code Pink events and hopes to be booked for more in the future.

"The energy, love, warmth and acceptance from Code Pink just inside that room is unreal," Tyler said. "I walked around the Square, and just the acceptance was different than anywhere else."

This week's Code Pink event challenges gender norms in society and promotes equality across the spectra of sexual orientation and gender identification. Wesley Craft and Aevan Gibson, two Oxford residents, have been to multiple Code Pink events and said they are excited to keep coming back for more.

"Code Pink creates a space where I can have fun without feeling othered — which is a pretty rare find in the South," Craft said.

He said he continues to go back for the music and energy.

"They are places where LGBTQ people and allies can feel safe, which to me is the best indicator of a good time," Gibson said. "Also, who doesn't love wearing a costume?"

Tyler Nelson, an Oxford resident and frequenter of drag shows, would like to see more happen in Oxford.

"For people that want to dress in drag but don't feel comfortable in a Southern city, a drag show is the best place to be," Nelson said.

Summers added that Code Pink aims to continue providing safe spaces and a sense of community by validating the individuality of attendees.

"It is important that Code

Pink events maintain its identity and (that) we continue to strengthen and unify everyone that steps a foot into the event," Summers said.

Rebels finish second overall, two place in top 10

FLINT CHRISTIAN
 THEDMSPORTS@GMAIL.COM

The Ole Miss women's golf team placed second at The Bruzzy Challenge in Argyle, Texas, after a bout of tough competition.

Four Rebels shot a combined 856 over three rounds each, good for 8 under par and only two shots behind the eventual champion, ranked No. 35 Baylor. The finish came in the face of top-level competition, as seven other ranked teams participated.

Two Rebels led the way for Ole Miss with top-10 finishes. Ellen Hutchinson-Kay excelled and finished tied for eighth with her final 2-under score of 214, a career-low score for the freshman, after she moved up 13 spots on the final day. Sophomore Conner Beth Ball also shot a 214 and tied for eighth in the final standings. This was the fourth top-10 finish of the season for the former All-SEC freshman.

"Today was the first day this semester that I felt like I was playing my game again," Ball said on the first day of the weekend's competition. "Today, as a team, we clicked, and we're ready to finish strong tomorrow. The mindset is continuing to stay aggressive and make more birdies."

Extremely windy conditions on the final day allowed for lots of movement across the leaderboard. The No. 41 Rebels entered the final day in first place at 18 under par overall, but the tough weather caused much higher scores than the first day.

Junior Kennedy Swann and freshman Macy Somoskey each entered the final round tied for ninth, but they dropped to 28th and 36th respectively after difficult final rounds. Both still placed in the top half of the field of 84.

"The conditions were tough today with gusty winds, and unfortunately, we faltered a little at the end of our round after making a great run for the win," head coach Kory Henkes told Ole Miss Athletics. "Anytime you are in contention, it is valuable learning experience for our young team. We played with a lot of heart this week, and we are proud of the progress we are making as we approach the post-season."

Baylor shot a final-round best of 3 over 291 to hold on as Ole Miss and Texas Tech dropped below. However, the Rebels were still encouraged by their play earlier in the weekend, especially by their record score of 276 in the first round. The 12-under 276 was the lowest single-round score in program history, although the team was still two strokes behind Texas Tech after the first day.

However, Ole Miss parlayed its record score into its runner-up finish ahead of teams like No. 2 Texas and No. 19 TCU.

The Ole Miss women's golf team's next competition, the Liz Murphey Collegiate Classic, will begin next Thursday, April 11, in Athens, Georgia. This is the team's last tournament before post-season play begins.

While the women's team competed in Texas, men's golf had the weekend off as they prepare for the Old Waverly tournament in West Point, Mississippi, which will be hosted by Mississippi State in less than two weeks.

In the meantime, freshman Jackson Suber was named the SEC Freshman of the Week for his performance at the Hootie in Charleston, South Carolina. The Tampa, Florida, native shot a 218 over the weekend, good for 2 under and the best score on the Ole Miss team. This was the second time this season Suber has led the Rebels.

Both Ole Miss teams will look to perform well in the coming days and weeks as the post-season gets underway in late April.
