how accountants can help management. We suggest to those interested in further comments on the accountant-management relationship, a new booklet; issued by the U. S. Small Business Administration, explaining to businessmen how to use the services of certified public accountants. The booklet, which is entitled "Public Accounting Services for Small Manufacturers," is available from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington 25, D. C., for 15 cents. The author is Robert E. Witschey, who recently served as chairman of the American Institute of Accountants advisory committee of local practitioners. It is the fifth in a series of booklets published by the Administration to assist small businessmen to do a better management job.

We noted in reading copies of the different ASWA chapter bulletins two rather unusual chapter projects which we think our entire membership would be interested in having brought to their attention.

Los Angeles chapter librarian, May Carlson, is working out a plan whereby she will have accounting and related subject books available for rental to members at a very nominal fee. It will prove quite a saving for those wishing to use these books for study or reference and all proceeds will go to the chapter.

Our Muskegon chapter, in line with the thought of other professional accounting groups, believes that the time to interest the student in accounting is when he or she is in high school. They are to be commended on the formation of "Future Accountants of America" clubs in the high schools.
