Dear Mr. Baughman:

This will, I think, appear to you to be an odd letter because it is only an inquiry and I'm not certain how serious at that. A year or so ago I talked with Rembert Patrick and I believe that he wrote you about me as a possibility for the history faculty for New College.

I have been here at the University of Mississippi for 27 years (I am now 54), have been chairman of the department, have been active in historical society work, have done a good deal of publishing, etc. Last month I succeeded Pat as president of the Southern Historical Association.

For several years I have been thinking that I might not want to do the last ten or fifteen years of teaching in Mississippi. In those years I hope, above everything else, to publish a couple of very good books, on southern leadership (or the lack of it). I have lost whatever interest I ever had in fooling with the mechanics of writing of theses and dissertations. But above everything else I think that I am tired of butting my head against a stone wall in the sovereign domain of Ross Barnett. Along with a good many others on the faculty here, I am and have been for years a target of the Citizens Council and I have no intention of leaving under fire - unless I am fired, which seems unlikely at the moment.

So, I suppose this is a kind of friendly inquiry about your plans. I have no idea as to whether I might fit into them but I do remember that I was intrigued by what I thought you had in mind when I read about the possibility of New College in the summer of 1961.

I know that you are a very busy man. If you can see any prospect of profit in it for you and me, I'd like very much to hear from you.

Sincerely,

James W. Silver
