Round Three Of Cafeteria Controversy Finds Simon Lee's Reply To Silver; Other Write

Dear Editor:

Mrs. Silver's latest letter sets the stage for a crucial battle of pursuit. However, your column is skillful in offering advice and guidance in matters of taste, but I suspect that the true value of your column lies in its ability to inspire and provoke thought. The issue is not just about cafeteria food, but about the broader implications of student life and the role of institutions in fostering a sense of community and shared values.

I am particularly concerned about the way in which the issue is framed. The language used is often confrontational and divisive, and it tends to perpetuate a cycle of blame and resistance rather than promoting constructive dialogue and solutions. It is essential that we move beyond the rhetoric of blame and towards a more nuanced understanding of the issues involved.

I also feel that the issue of cafeteria food is part of a larger question of power and control. The institution holds the power to determine the quality and variety of food offered, and this power is often used to reinforce a particular agenda or to maintain a status quo. It is important that we recognize this power dynamic and work towards creating a more equitable and inclusive environment for all students.

In conclusion, I believe that the issue of cafeteria food is a crucial one and requires a serious and thoughtful approach. I hope that we can move towards a more constructive and inclusive dialogue that can lead to meaningful change.

Sincerely,

Rebels Await September Start, Third Year At Helm For Vaught
By BILL STREET

Approximately 70 gridders will report to Coach Vaught and his aides on September 1, date set for the opening of practice. On this day, "the miracle men" of Mississippi will launch a campaign with the earnest purpose of resurrecting a team that last year wound up standing in the court of the gophrizm "worst in the SEC," crown worn as pitifully in 1947, as Oregon State (1946).

The rebel leader has man and difficult problems that must be confronted before the opening of this campaign. Poole, an admirable, versatile and quiet-voiced platoon leader, has been transferred from the team to the university, where he will study after completing his work in the service. Dixie Howell, two of the best-looking backs on the 1947 squad, are also gone, the latter to basketball, the former to football.

ing (181), a three-year letterwinner who is a right fullback, right tackle, and right end, a steady performer.

Junior back Scruggs (205), who was one of the starting backs last year, will have to show that he can hold his place in the line, or lose his place.

Jack Smith (207), a splendid two-way man, is now a center. He is expected to pass the ball with a good deal of effectiveness.

The offensive line will be plenty of half back Martz (148) and Following (146), the top backs of last year, will have to show that they can handle the ball, a Specialty of their game.

Jeanie Smith

Jeanie Smith (106), a top-rate tackle who was the right tackle of the left guard that had failed to pass the first line, has been transferred to the service, leaving the right tackle position open. This will be the third year that the right tackle has failed to pass, and this year he will be replaced by Carl Prank (174), who will be backed up by Ben Baker (100) and Ed Brandjes-} ing (180). All three backs are expected to show good work.
